History of SCENTED HAIR STICK – A.K.A. – Scent Stick

This concept, present invention stated above, was created by the said above inventors. This product was initially developed and claims to provide an efficient and effective means of creating a scented hair accessory that can be worn either in the hair, functionally to secure the hair in a ponytail arrangement or decoratively to provide a scent in a decorative manner.

The original design of the product was developed as a wooden hair stick that incorporated a perfume stick, which contained perfumed oils. Through the course of concept development, the original design was determined to be complex and expensive to manufacture

Therefore, the original design was enhanced and modified to ensure that the above outlined areas were addressed, that the product was unique and novel and that the product could be easily integrated into a specific company's production line.

Currently, the product has been redesigned as die-cut scented blotter paper measuring 4.750 inches by 1.25 inches. An OEM (Original Equipment Manufacture) wooden hair stick is utilized for securing the scented blotter paper in one's hair. The enhancements permit the invention to be relatively inexpensive to manufacture.

Please see the virtual reality illustration, one rendering of the photographed prototype, and one C.A.D. drawing for design details. In addition, the virtual reality rendering illustrates the conceptual packaging that has been utilized to this date. The packaging clearly identifies the product's function and uses.

Note:

While the invention has been described and referenced to by several visual, illustrative embodiments, it is not intended that this application be limited thereby, but modifications thereof are intended to be included as falling within the broad scope and spirit of this disclosure.
